Description

Dying Light is a great game that combines two types of games, survival and horror , it was a great combination that has never existed before. This is a first-person game about the zombie apocalypse. It is a game with an open world worth exploring, at every step we can give something interesting on its way or something very dangerous. The game is based mainly on melee combat with most fights using white weapons. There are more than 100 weapons that can be used and more than 1000 weapon options when players start creating new weapons. The melee weapons have a limited lifespan and will be degraded and eventually broken if the player uses them for a long time to fight. Players can repair the weapon a limited number of times. Craft weapons require the production of ingredients, such as gauze and metal parts, and a plan that can be exchanged or bought in the store. In the game there are also pistols (two types of assault rifle and various small firearms and shotguns), but players have access to them only in the second half of the game. The guns do not break or degrade; however, ammunition is generally very rare. Dying Light contains a dynamic cycle of day and night. During the day, the player must search the inventory to send it back to safe areas. They can set traps, save random survivors and go to discharges. Infected are slow, apathetic and easily visible, which allows the player to simply avoid them, but their danger grows in numbers. On October 1, 2014, Techland announced that the full version of the game would be over 50 hours of play , including all downloads.
